

When some kids went back to school

Mel Churton
Registered Psychologist
April 2020

A nasty bug called COVID-19 made people sick. It spread around the world.

Our Prime Minister said the best thing to do is to go home and stay safe. This was called Lockdown Level 4.

So everyone went home and stayed in their 'bubble'.

After a while, less people were getting sick. Lots more people were getting better.

The Prime Minister said it was ok to go to Level 3 of Lockdown. Some people could go back to work.

If there was no one at home to look after the kids, some kids could go back to school.

So a few kids went back to school.

School looked the same but it wasn't:

- There were only a few kids there
- They had to stay in small 'bubbles' so they kept nice and safe
- The teachers were there to take care of the kids but in a different way
- The kids did activities and booklets and on line learning, not taught stuff
- It was more like the learning the kids did when they were at home than normal school

The playtimes were different too:

- The kids all had their own special exercise time and they had to stay in their small 'bubbles'.

Everyone had to follow the COVID-19 rules:

- √Don't get too close to other people
- √Cough and sneeze into your elbow
- √Put your used tissues in the bin
- √Don't share drink bottles
- √Wash your hands carefully
- √Stay home if you are sick

All of this was super important to keep everyone safe.

Level 3 was a strange kind of different but the kids soon got used to it:

☺ They did their work

☺ They stayed in their bubbles

☺ They followed the COVID-19 rules

After a while, more people got better and the bug wasn't around so much.

The Prime Minister said it was ok to go to Lockdown- Level 2.

This meant more people could go back to work. The rest of the kids could go back to school.

And life could get another step closer to normal again!